

School Breakfast Program (SBP) and National School Lunch Program (NSLP)

PRESCHOOL NUTRIENT STANDARDS

All preschool meals must meet the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) nutrient standards, as indicated in sections 210.10(p) and 220.8(o) of the USDA's final rule, Nutrition Standards in the National School Lunch and School Breakfast Programs (7 CFR Parts 210 and 220). The Healthy and Hunger-Free Kids Act of 2010 requires the USDA to develop new meal patterns for the Child and Adult Care Food Program (CACFP). The current nutrient standards for NSLP meals for preschoolers remain in effect until the USDA revises the CACFP meal patterns.

<sup>1</sup> This chart shows the minimum school week averages for nutrients except fat and saturated fat, which are maximum levels.

<sup>2</sup> A school week is defined as a normal school week of five consecutive days. To accommodate shortened weeks resulting from holidays and other scheduling needs, the period shall be a minimum of three consecutive days and a maximum of seven consecutive days.

<sup>3</sup> Nutrients and calories start at age 2 because the Dietary Guidelines for Americans applies to ages 2 and older.

<sup>5</sup> The 1995 Dietary Guidelines for Americans recommends that after age 2 children should gradually adopt a diet that, by about age 5, contains no more than 30 percent of calories from fat. Note: The USDA preschool nutrient standards were developed when the 1995 Dietary Guidelines for Americans were in effect. The 2010 Dietary Guidelines for Americans recommends that children ages 1-3 should consume 30 to 40 percent of their calories from fat and children ages 4-18 should consume 25 to 35 percent of their calories from fat.
